

SHOW CASE

Arctic Fox

On a trip to Churchill, Manitoba, Canada, Daniel J. Cox found this fox curled up on a snowbank. The photograph was taken about five years ago during a time that was particularly healthy for the fox population. The next year, it took a dive. "It goes in cycles," Cox says. "The population builds up and then it crashes." Every year, he works as one of two resident photographers, guiding the Cape Churchill trips for Tundra Buggy Adventures. Cox has been a photographer for 25 years. To see more of his images, visit www.naturalexposures.com.

Nikon D2H, Zoom-Nikkor 200-400mm